

Regional Conference of the Network of Social Democracy in Asia
“Effecting Real Change in Local Governance: Perspectives for Social Democratic Policies”

November 19-22, 2009,
Park Royal Hotel (tbc), Penang, Malaysia

(draft as of 16 November 2009)

Background

Social democratic parties and social democratic politics in Southeast Asia are still struggling to take root, but they are increasingly gaining ground. Political parties and pre-party formations that have sprung out of mass-based politics have been formed and have been orienting their political objectives and programs along the values of freedom, social justice, and solidarity.

Facilitated by the waves of democratic fever and institutional reforms that swept the region in recent decades, these progressive political parties gained a shot at political power, particularly at the local level. The Philippines is pioneering in this respect, having produced a reformed Leftist party, Akbayan, which has 20 incumbent local government officials. A similar trend is also observed in Malaysia, where opposition parties, such as the Democratic Action Party, are on the rise, capturing state governments while some independent activists have won in the recent parliamentary elections. Indonesia houses a number of progressive party-building initiatives. Despite the unsuccessful bid for registration of a peasant-based party (Partai Perserikatan Rakyat), it is hopeful that in the meantime, direct local elections will produce progressive politicians such as what has happened in Aceh and Bengkulu. Social democratic and progressive party building is least developed in Thailand but there are current civil society efforts to walk this path. A new party was born from the anti-Thaksin movement while other social movements have renewed their party building projects. A number of social movement activists, particularly outside Bangkok, have already crossed-over to the local government.

In May 2009, such political groups and fraternal organizations from Asia and Europe met in Manila to launch a regional network of social-democratic oriented political parties and organizations. It was agreed that such a network would work together to mutually reinforce their activities, to encourage party-building, to exchange experiences and learning, and to express common positions vis-à-vis political developments in the region. (For further information, please visit <http://www.socdem.asia/>).

It was further agreed that this network would regularly meet to discuss current topics of common concern, and in the process establish a social democratic voice and practices in the region. With the support of fraternal institutions such as the Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung (FES) and the Olof Palme International Center (OPIC), the network will hold its second regional conference in November 2009 in Penang, Malaysia.

Objectives

The need for cross-country learning and shaping a social-democratic discourse on politics and governance becomes even more compelling in the light of the current global economic crisis. While the crisis has finally taken the steam out of neo-liberal ideology, it remains the task of progressives to shape alternative discourse on governance and policy reforms at the global, regional, and national level. Underpinning these reforms are new ways of thinking about the state-market-society relations. Of paramount relevance to Southeast Asian social-democratic and progressive political parties is the reshaping of these relations at the local level. Aided by democratic decentralization, the local space provides better opportunities for progressive parties (and individuals) and citizens in the region to reshape their relations and shore up social-democratic reforms. Out of principle, political analysis, and/or capacity, these progressive political parties are effectively operating in sub-national levels of government.

Therefore, the conference has three main objectives that are partly interlinked:

- 1) To present and share party-building efforts of network members, with a particular focus on the experiences of the host country, i.e. for this conference, Malaysia;
- 2) To discuss 2 examples of social-democratic local governance practices and approaches;

- 3) To initially share and discuss approaches to social policy/ social protection as social-democratic policy advocacies.

The selected issues shall be (a) public transportation and (b) water services.

- (a) Public Transportation is currently a big issue in Penang and in cities elsewhere in the region, but most Southeast Asian social-democratic and progressive parties are yet to work on this issue. In this regard, the conference aims to provide concrete plans and experiences from Malaysia and other countries to help the network members conceptualize their approaches on this issue.
- (b) Water service delivery is a concern for all, and some network members have already made substantial progress on this issue. In this regard, the conference aims to draw out lessons and insights that can be adapted and/or replicated by the network members.

Both these two issues will be discussed first on a conceptual level (What is a social-democratic approach to public transportation and water service delivery?). Secondly, network members will share how the conceptual work has influenced policy-making and implementation of these policies and programs incl. political and practical hurdles needed to be overcome.

On the issue of social protection, the conference will start a discussion process among the network members. Social policy/ social protection is, for social democrats, an essential component of public policy. After the financial and economic crisis, perspectives on social policy are slowly changing in the region, and it is now possible to bring it to the center of policy debates. Network members will have a chance to jointly formulate their arguments in favor of stronger social protection and to start a discussion – to be continued and deepened during the next network meeting - on what elements Asian social democrats find essential, urgent and feasible.

Lastly, the conference will provide space for participants to further develop the strategic direction of the network while planning specific actions that will follow this conference.

In sum, the learning agenda of the conference are as follows:

- To identify workable social democratic approaches in local governance (focusing on social service delivery) based on actual experiences of social democratic parties in Asia.
- To draw out lessons and strategies in introducing/implementing social-democratic local governance by parties in transition (i.e. progressive parties that have just become ruling parties).
- To begin formulating a social policy/ social protection agenda of the network.
- To map out working relations between and among party-government-social movement/ civil society in bringing about social democratic local governance.
- To identify the strategic direction and specific follow-through activities of the network.
